The novel opens in 1965, as the Civil Rights Movement is gaining momentum. Evelyn, a young black woman, is pregnant with her first child. She is determined to give her baby a better life than she had, but she knows that the odds are stacked against her. When her son, Michael, is born, she vows to do everything in her power to protect him from the racism and injustice that she has faced.

Twenty years later, Michael is a successful lawyer. He has married a white woman, and they have two children. But Michael is haunted by the memories of his childhood, and he knows that he can never truly escape the legacy of racism in the South.

In the present day, Michael's daughter, Sarah, is a young woman who is struggling to find her place in the world. She is drawn to the activism of her grandmother, but she also knows that the world has changed since the 1960s. Sarah must find her own way to fight for justice, and she must learn to reconcile the past with the present.

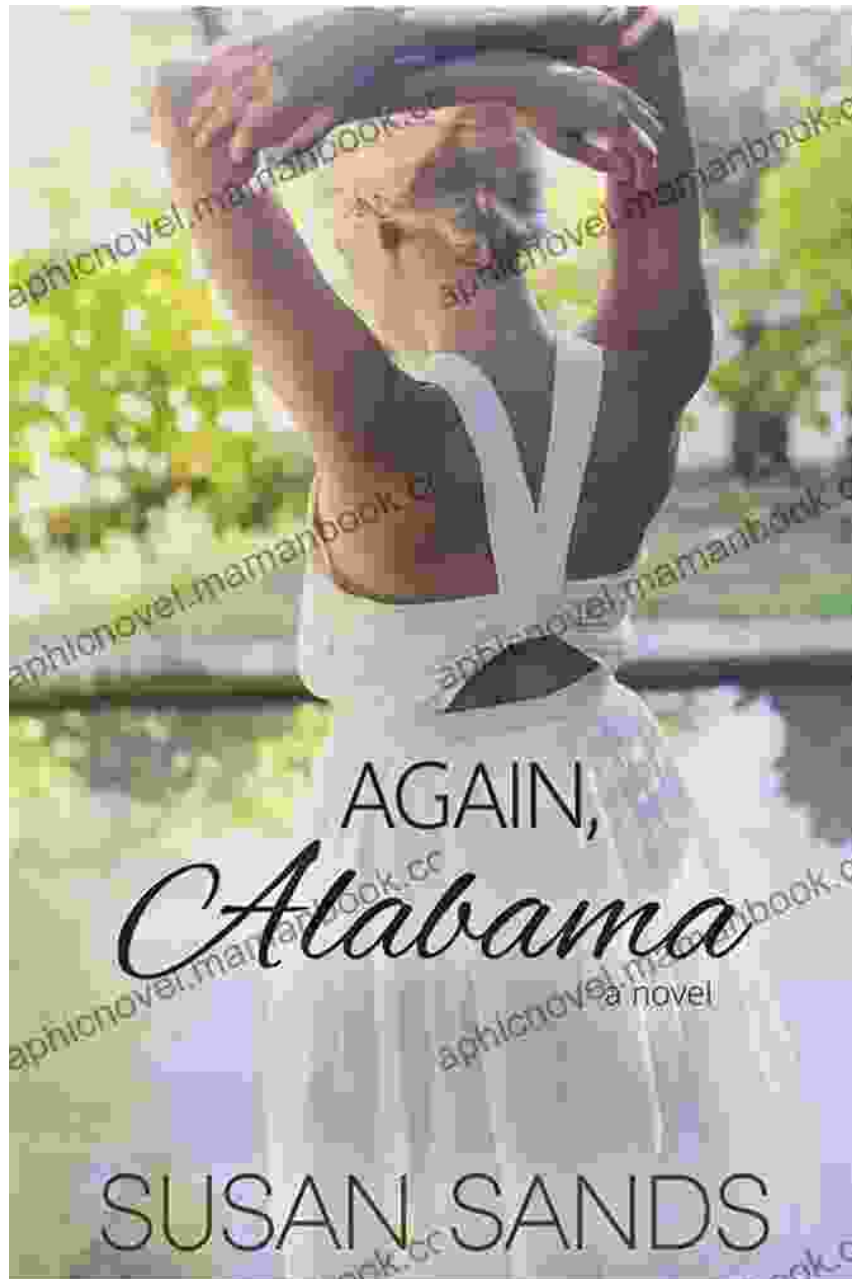

Again, Alabama is a beautifully written and emotionally resonant novel. Sands's characters are complex and well-developed, and her story is both heartbreaking and hopeful. The novel is a reminder of the long and painful history of racism in the United States, but it is also a testament to the power of love, resilience, and redemption.

Here are some of the things that make Again, Alabama a must-read:

- The characters are unforgettable. Evelyn, Michael, and Sarah are all complex and well-developed characters. Readers will root for them as they navigate the challenges of life in the Deep South.
- The story is both heartbreaking and hopeful. Again, Alabama is a story of love, loss, and redemption. Readers will be moved by the characters' struggles, but they will also be inspired by their resilience.
- The setting is evocative and atmospheric. Sands's descriptions of the Deep South are vivid and evocative. Readers will feel like they are transported to another time and place.

- The writing is beautiful and lyrical. Sands is a gifted writer, and her prose is both elegant and moving.
